

THEIS HOME FROM ALASKA

Cutter Used During Summer as Floating Court in Northern Waters—Brings Ashes from Kodiak—Captain Cochran Continues in Command.

A large quantity of ashes which almost destroyed the town of Kodiak, Alaska, a year ago, when the Rogosloff crater belched forth destroying mass over the outlying islands, was brought to Honolulu yesterday on board the United States revenue cutter Theis, which came direct from Valdez.

The ashes are not carried on the cutter as a curiosity of the terrific volcanic outburst but because of their utilitarian qualities. Captain Cochran found that the ashes were excellent for cleaning decks and metal work. After considerable experimenting he decided to employ the ashes permanently.

The Theis made the trip back to Honolulu from Valdez in thirteen days. The cutter had favorable winds and seas all the way down, and the officers were pleased that the historic old vessel was still capable of making good speed.

Old Officers Return.

The vessel came into port about three o'clock and was swung to moorings in the old naval row. The first moorings were unsatisfactory and the vessel was shifted close to the row of Inter-Island steamers which are moored in the row.

Many of the officers who were attached to the Theis when it left here last April are still aboard with Captain Cochran still in command. His close companion is his faithful dog "Rags." Lieutenant Maher is still first lieutenant. Lieutenant Parker is a new officer, having relieved Lieutenant Pine. Lieutenant Derby and Lieutenant Bothwell remained with the vessel all through the Alaskan cruise.

Chief Engineer Myers still commands the engine room, his assistants being Lieutenant O'Brien, who replaced Lieutenant Doyle, and Lieutenant Daniels. Doctor Harper, the new surgeon will probably be attached to the United States quarantine service here.

Floating Court Ship.

The Theis went from Honolulu to San Francisco when the engines were overhauled, going thence to Valdez, arriving on July 8. The cutter took aboard the United States District Court, known generally as "The Floating Court," at Valdez on a tour of Alaskan towns at all of which sessions were held. Judge R. W. Jennings of the Alaska division, presided at all sessions. The cutter went to Bristol Bay, Seward, Ilamna and Unalaska, and on reaching the town of Dillingham the court held its first session.

The cases for all towns were fewer in number than usual. There was one murder case, that of a native who had killed a mail carrier. He was sentenced to a term of ten years imprisonment for the crime.

The Alaskan seas seemed to be free of poachers and few fishermen were found anywhere in the waters. The seals have had a year of peace, say the Theis officers. Whales were plentiful, but no whaling ships were encountered on the entire cruise. The weather was pleasant throughout.

"The town of Kodiak is recovering from the fearful storm of ashes which fell upon it last year," said Captain Cochran. "The residents are digging out their old gardens and are again growing vegetables. Although the ashes have covered the island yet the vegetation is springing up through it. I was told that the ashes would really be splendid soil if it were fertilized."

Visited By Former Engineer.

Among the visitors to the ship yesterday afternoon was Superintendent Sheedy of the Inter-Island company, who was formerly an engineer on the Theis.

"The Theis is intimately connected with the Greeley Relief Expedition," said Mr. Sheedy, after returning ashore. "The Theis was originally a British whaling ship and was presented by Queen Victoria to the United States as a relief ship for the Arctic. Lieutenant Schley of the Navy, commanded the vessel in the early eighties when it went north to find Greeley and his companions. Greeley and a few of his men were found in a dying condition and were brought back to the United States. When the Theis was in Alaska and Greeley was stationed there he never failed to visit the vessel when it was within reach."

The Theis has had the honor of carrying many men of the Navy who have become more or less famous. Rear Admiral Melville was an engineer aboard, while Schley and Sigbee were both attached to it.

May Visit Islands.

Captain Cochran states that possibly in a few weeks the Theis will make a trip to westward to visit Laysan, Lisiansky, and the smaller islets and shoals between Honolulu and Midway, to ascertain whether Japanese poachers have again visited the islands to slay birds for their plumage.

The officers say the crew aboard the Theis is one of the best they have ever commanded. The men were picked up at San Francisco.

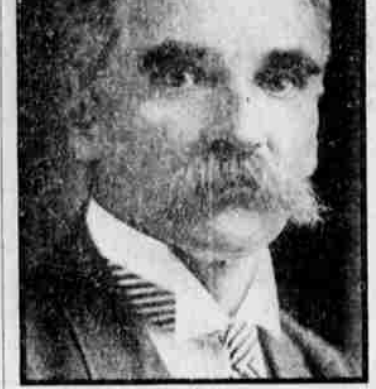

SOME DEMOCRATS NOT ENTHUSED

Old Bourbon Leaders Slow to Allow C. W. Ashford to Guide Them.

(From Thursday Advertiser.)

A number of Democrats yesterday received notices signed by C. W. Ashford to the effect that there would be a meeting held Friday evening to discuss plans for the reorganization of the Democratic party.

This announcement that Ashford had constituted himself a Moses to lead the Democrats out of the political wilderness came as somewhat of a surprise to several Democrats who have been actively connected with the party for years. Ashford, it was declared, has never taken any interest in the party during the long years but is now said to be a candidate for a place on the supreme bench.

There was some question too, among these Democrats as to who were present at the meeting which Ashford said was held Monday night and at which it was decided to hold a humorous conference. Walker, Watson, Wilder and several others mentioned as being present, declare they were not there. Senator Wirtz heard he was on the reorganization committee to meet Governor Harrison, when he saw it in the newspapers long after the guest of the day had landed.

Leaders in the Dark.

In fact the majority of the Democratic leaders mentioned seem to be completely in the dark as to the plans announced by Ashford and intimated yesterday that they didn't care for any enlightenment under the circumstances.

"I fear that I will have to be excused from attending," said R. M. Watson, "for I don't care to go out at night much. Further, I am in favor of a reorganization which will eliminate McCandless and his gang, for only by so doing can the party be placed on a responsible footing."

Opposed to McCandless.

"I also think that the work of reorganization should be undertaken by a Democrat who has been prominent in the councils of the party. I am glad to see that Mr. Ashford had decided to take an interest in the welfare of the party, but with due respect to him, if he had taken it deeper and more active interest in the party heretofore, he would have known that Link McCandless and his party in the Democratic party are not and can never be synonymous."

"There is no question in regard to the desirability of reorganizing the party, but I believe it can only be done by eliminating those who have used it simply for their own selfish ends."

Zeno K. Myers Cranks Machine With Gears Set, Is Run Over and Painfully Crippled.

Neglecting to throw out the gears before cranking his auto Zeno K. Myers, president of the Home Insurance Company, Fort and King streets, yesterday morning was run over by his own automobile and sustained such serious injuries that it was found necessary to amputate part of one of his feet.

As the engine caught, the machine lurched forward. Myers jumped but not quite far enough and he was thrown to the ground, the car passing over one of his feet and breaking all the small bones. It was at first thought that it would be necessary for him to lose the entire foot but after a consultation only part of it was operated upon and the house physicians at the Queen's Hospital stated last night that the operation had been successful. A speedy recovery is looked for.

Relief Felt That End of Tariff Revision is Near

But Little Trouble Is Expected in Washington in Getting Democratic Measure Through Caucus—Nearly Ready Now to Tackle Currency Question.

By Ernest G. Walker.
(Mail Special to The Advertiser.)

WASHINGTON, D. C., Sept. 4.—Nothing at Washington so much accelerates and splits as knowledge that the end of tariff revision is near. A long, dreary period it has been for all concerned. Days have multiplied with so little progress that hope of the last word and the final roll call seemed like a dream. This very week was set for the end, time and time again, only to prove to be the next week. But at last the senate has been so near the end it became a matter of how long La Follette could hold out with talk, and how long one or two other prolix senators could hold out just as the curtain was being rung down. There was dramatic stage play, efforts to get attention of the country through ingenuity, where other senators had failed.

There is plenty of opportunity, from the Republican viewpoint, to criticize the revision. Grave doubts exist as to whether many of the rules will stand through the rough experience of competition. But that aside, the senate Democrats, proceeding from their platform of principles, have handled the revision well. They have been long at it. That was well high inevitable. Most of their finance committee members were green men and tariff is not to be learned in a day. Because they were green men, they desired to proceed with caution and to inquire at every little point of doubt.

Disposed to Be Fair.

From the Democratic point of view, again, there has been a disposition to be fair. Although majority leaders were assailed most vigorously, if not viciously, from the beginning, they kept their poise and good temper. They have yielded here and there, when it could be shown that yielding was warranted. As a matter of fact, the finance committee made over many paragraphs of the bill, and consideration began in the senate. It has been rather quietly done and has come item by item so as to command little attention. All during the pendency of the bill before the senate, members of the finance committee have been studying various matters brought before them and gathering information. Some of the staunchest Republicans here on tariff revision, have said that the only fault they had to find with the finance committee majority has been that they are Democrats.

"They have treated me quite as courteously as the Republican senators ever did," said one of these Republicans who has been coming here much during revisions, ever since the Dingey Law was being framed. "They have listened to whatever I had to say. They want to know what is right and what is wrong, and are willing to make changes, when they see a thing is wrong. But, of course, their point of view is different than mine, and that is where my complaint lies."

Prolonged consideration of the bill in the senate probably has not been futile. All in all, it is probably better tariff bill than the one that came from the house more than three months ago. The waiting has been very wearisome, but possibly has been worth while. The Democrats took an exceptionally long time with the bill in committee—longer, it might seem, than was necessary. Had there been more old Democratic hands on the committee, more men of long experience in tariff building, less time would have been needed. Undoubtedly much of the senate debate on the bill has been of no avail and of very doubtful utility. Everything has gone through as the finance committee and the Democratic caucus decided, even to the dotting of an "i" and the crossing of a "t." In that the legislature is a better triumph for it is probably a better triumph for the wilderness, after long just coming into control of the senate, by a narrow margin.

Oceans of Words Spilled.

As a matter of fact, oceans of words have been spilled on this tariff revision, and it would have been just as well had these words never been spoken. Democrats have offended to a degree, although they have restrained themselves tolerably and left Republicans to do most of the talking. On the whole the deliberation over the tariff bill, particularly the deliberation in the finance committee and in the caucus, has been quite worth while. If the Democratic party is to go to smash on its tariff enactments, there will be no excuse that the revision was hastily done. The Democrats must take the responsibility, and after all the care they have exercised, they should give no excuse. They had an overwhelming majority in the house, and they have had enough votes in the senate. All the talk about defections and about a lack of votes to pass the bill in form approved of by the administration has proven froth. It seemed from the first that it would. Two Louisiana senators have proven the only recalcitrants.

It is quite noteworthy how the discordant Democratic elements of the senate have stood together over the tariff bill. The result undoubtedly would not have been the same, but for President Wilson's influence. Thompson of Kansas was expected to kick over the traces because of beet sugar. Walsh of Montana was thought in danger of doing likewise because of beet. Newlands of Nevada because of both, and so on through quite a category. But after a measure of "performing" all these senators came nicely into line. Hitchcock of Nebraska has been thrashing around, but not particularly because of tariff. The income tax features gave the Democratic leaders a few uncomfortable hours, but there was Chairman Simmons, always ready to move that a paragraph be referred to the committee for further consideration, and there was the Democratic caucus, always ready to meet again, if the action within the committee was very pronounced. Consequently insurgency has not been permitted to go far, before it was submitted to the supreme council of the party in the senate and everybody given an opportunity to present his cause. That has kept would-be kickers in good temper.

Six Months to Pass Measure.

But while the tariff bill is out of the senate, some days must pass before there are more bills to sign. There is much in the way of official formalities to be complied with. Chairman Underwood, of the house ways and means committee, has been anticipating some of these. He has called upon President Wilson and discussed certain of the more important changes which the senate has written by way of amendment. Probably there will be other visits to the president on the same errand before both houses get into complete agreement and it will be well before October 1 before the tariff bill becomes a law. For the senate may have another long debate on the conference report, will, in all probability, occupy three or four days, or a week in that way. And, accordingly, it will be very close to six months that congress has been in special session, drilling on the tariff. In other words it has taken the Democrats about six months to do what the Republicans did in four months. Four years ago, really, it has been more than a six months' job, because the ways and means committee began to give hearings on tariff several months in advance of the time when a Democratic congress convened in extra session. But the Republicans, in 1909, did the same thing.

Trillions of words have been printed in the newspapers about the revision and yet it is undoubtedly a fact that there are not 1000 people in the United States who could tell the rates on 100 different articles in the Underwood revision bill. The public at large knows that wool is to be free, that sugar is to be free after three years, and so on for a few leading articles, which have been generally discussed in journalistic articles. Hundreds and hundreds of duties will remain the same in the Underwood Law as they were in the Aldrich-Bayne Law, a very few duties will be higher, but a majority of the duties will be materially lower.

Cost of Living Unchanged.

Even many manufacturers do not yet know actually how the duties will work out with regard to their particular lines. That is because certain duties will become a matter of interpretation and only the law officers of the government can decide. However, as a general proposition, manufacturers and producers have informed themselves very generally as to what the new tariff means and as it goes into operation they will strive to adjust their business to the new conditions. There will be no little interest on the part of the average citizen as to how the new law evens out. It is conceded that it will not materially reduce the cost of living, something in which the voters are very vitally concerned.

The wheels of legislation are already busily whirling for this second great which President Wilson has brought to the mill. The procedure is very much the same, as it was with tariff. The bill has been made a caucus measure in the house, even though Democrats were reluctant that it should be so. Some reason that this would drive Republicans away from the bill, but this is not yet certain. Many house Republicans will not vote for it, but they will not vote against it. The currency bill, the text of which is before the house this week for ratification. To really the work of a currency bill, is about as good as done by the house. True there will be several days of debating and finally a vote but the bill will come from the house in the same words and sentences that are just coming from the house banking and currency committee with the O. K. of the house caucus.

Currency Fight in Senate.

The senate is going from one hard battle right into another. The currency fight has already centered there. No one is paying particular attention any longer to what the house is saying or thinking about the bill. The house has "done spoken" when the caucus of the majority has spoken.

The Currency Bill will be amended, however, if it is to become law this autumn, as it probably is. That process is already under way, with the senate banking and currency committee in the stress and strain of extended hearings. Some may say it will be a month before the Currency Bill is reported to the senate. Possibly it will be that long. No one can quite tell. Currency is even more intricate than tariff, but it does not cover so many separate topics and does not call for such comprehensive knowledge as to details. The bankers are to have a good long, in any event though the senate does not follow their advice in all things. Secretary McAdoo, it will be remembered, consulted with numerous bankers who came to town in connection with allotments of treasury funds to banks for crop moving purposes, a few weeks ago. There was much talk then about various aspects of the bill and suggestions were made by the visitors. Now the senate committee on banking and currency is giving exhaustive hearings to a committee of the American Bankers Association and others.

Presumably the Currency Bill will have to go through the caucus process in the senate. That has not been much discussed yet, but indications are that way. A senate caucus can easily con-

MUST ANSWER FOR INFANT'S DEATH

Chun Kim Sut and Wife to Be Placed on Trial for Murder Today.

(From Thursday Advertiser.)

Chun Kim Sut and his wife, Chun Wong Shue, charged with infanticide, will be tried before a jury today in Judge Robinson's court, the case to begin at half-past eight o'clock this morning. This is the case which arose over the death of a little Chinese girl, said at first to have come to her death due to a fall from the bed on which the child was lying. The authorities later on claimed to have found, on investigation, that the child was murdered. The arrest of the parents followed. They are now out on bail of $2000 each. Chun Kim Sut is reported to be one of the richest Chinese of Honolulu. This case is the only one on Judge Robinson's court calendar for today.

Another conviction was obtained in Judge Robinson's court yesterday when the jury, after being out for twenty minutes, found Pedro Orado guilty of burglary in the first degree. This was the third conviction of the season. Orado was sentenced by Judge Robinson to a term of imprisonment for not less than one year. This was the first murder taken up in this court yesterday.

Eight criminal cases are on the calendar for tomorrow in this court, which will convene at half-past eight o'clock. Four cases will be tried before a jury, three are jury-waived matters, and the eighth, that of J. W. Marshall, charged with the murder of C. R. Guerrier, is down on the calendar for plea.

Quiet Day in Judge Cooper's Court.

There was nothing doing in Judge Cooper's court yesterday. The case of Dong You vs. Wing Hing Dray Company, an assumption matter, will be heard before Judge Cooper this morning at nine o'clock. At ten o'clock the motion, inter appeal, in the Asalegates, This should start at once, argues the committee.

Tomorrow will be another quiet day in the court, the only matter on the calendar for the day being the Pague vs. J. H. Combs civil case, which will be taken up at two o'clock in the afternoon.

The civil case of George Paris vs. Loo Joo, which was originally on the calendar for hearing before Judge Cooper at half-past eight o'clock this morning, has been continued until October 1, at half-past eight o'clock.

Advertiser Story Found Correct.

Upon investigating the story published yesterday in The Advertiser, to the effect that an apparent slip-up had crept into the written decision signed by Judge Cooper in the Jesse Replevin case, the judge yesterday found the story correct. Lorin Andrews, the attorney who had prepared the decision, was notified of the error, and forthwith proceeded to prepare new papers which were later filed in the clerk's office. The original document had gone on to read that Judge Cooper had found for plaintiff in the replevin matter, while in the next paragraph the clerk was instructed to enter judgment for the defendant. This was an apparent error, which the Advertiser pointed out, with the result that the files in the case are now correct.

Land Court in Session.

Judge Whitney had before him yesterday the matter of the application to register title in Robins B. Anderson to certain land in Nuuanu Valley near the Oahu Country Club. A stipulation has been filed between Anderson, for himself, and Deputy Attorney General Arthur G. Smith, for the Territory, that water rights in regard to this land should not be adjudicated at all at this time in this case. There are two streams and a ditch which flow through the land in question, and the Territory wants to have its rights in this matter protected.

GREAT FUTURE FOR TENNIS.

There should be a great future in store for American tennis with Maurice Loughlin and R. N. Williams showing the class of real champions while still youngsters. They will hardly last as long as Billy Larned, who won championships when he was at the forty-year mark. But American tennis supremacy ought to be in pretty good shape for many years to come.

ROME, September 17.—(Special to The Advertiser)—General Torelli and two other officers and twenty-eight private were killed at Benghazi, Arabia, when Arabs attacked the Italian column there, according to a dispatch received here today. Seventy-three Italian soldiers were injured. The Arabs were repulsed.

Some time is required to engage the opposition in preliminary skirmishes. There are Democratic and Republican senators alike who doubt the expediency of enacting a currency bill this autumn. They have varying reasons for this but it will be necessary to bring the recalcitrant Democrats into line as far as may be, and to that end, some maneuvering will be indispensable. Many visits to the White House offices on the part of Democratic senators may be expected. And there may be consultations with some western Republican senators in the hope of support from them and there will be some changes in the text to make the measure more acceptable to the bankers. A lot of work there is yet to do to get a currency bill into shape and it will take time, most of the time till November 1 at least.

WISE VERDICT BY CORONER'S JURY

Places Stigma of Suicide on Unknown Man Found Dead on Beach, Although Weapon With Which Deed Was Committed Was Not Located—Police Still Work on Mystery.

(From Thursday Advertiser.)

Still a mystery, the death of an unknown man supposed to be named Sidney Anyz, still baffles the police. In spite of the publication of his likeness and inquiries at all local hotels and rooming houses, a search of the books of all laundries and other usual police procedures, Deputy Sheriff Rose, who is handling the case, has not yet discovered the man's Honolulu home, if he had one.

Several citizens called at the morgue yesterday after half-recognizing the picture of the dead man. One of these was a recent arrival on a steamer who declared a fellow-passenger of his had closely answered the description. Even after looking at the body he was unable to say whether it was the man or not. Deputy Sheriff Rose then called in another passenger on the same steamer and finally made certain that the so-called Anyz was not the man that they referred to. Nigel Jackson was another visitor at the morgue and declared that he recognized the victim of Tuesday's tragedy as a man he had often seen walking around town during the past several months.

"Apparently Self-Inflicted."

Deputy Sheriff Rose yesterday called a coroner's jury to sit on the case and a verdict was returned stating that he came to his death from a gunshot wound "apparently self-inflicted." It was one of the shortest inquests ever held in the local station as there was only one witness, he being the police surgeon, Doctor Emerson. The deputy laid the receipts found on the body before the jury. It was from them that the name was learned as well as several aliases it is believed Anyz traveled under.

The police are waiting for further developments before they make up their minds definitely that it is a case of suicide. Deputy Sheriff Rose made several experiments at the beach with small, heavy objects and proved that the wash of one wave would cover them up with sand, demonstrating his belief that if it was suicide, the revolver used could easily be lost in that manner.

He found one man who had been in Kapiolani Park Monday afternoon and who had seen a man answering the description of Anyz walking toward the Diamond Head beach. This man was described as one who had not had a shave for two or three days which agrees with the condition of the dead man.

A close examination of the head was made yesterday at the morgue, but failed to show any fracture or any other wound beside the one bullet hole. The bruise on the left temple was not quite skin deep and it is the belief of the coroner that it was caused when the body fell to some rock or piece of coral after the bullet was fired.

Butcher from Chiyo Maru Hides Hop on Legs and Is Nabbed by Customs Officer.

A. Aebusa, a Japanese butcher aboard the Toyoi Kisen Kaisha liner Chiyo Maru, did not read The Advertiser yesterday morning, or he would not have attempted to walk across the gangway from the steamer to the Alaka wharf gallery with two tins of opium fastened to his legs below the knees beneath his trousers. As a result of his oversight he was arrested by Customs Inspector McNeill, for the latter was on the lookout for law-breakers attempting to smuggle opium into the city.

The Advertiser yesterday told the story of two Japanese deck hands of the steamship Manchuria who attempted the same trick and were caught in the act.

The butcher was the second man to cross the gangway to the gallery after the vessel docked. He was debonair and waved his hand to acquaintances, but he forgot the vigilant inspector. He was stopped and the inspector ran his hands over his clothes. A quick hand thrust disclosed two tins of opium cleverly fastened against the smuggler's legs.

The smugglers have devised a new shaped can to smuggle with. It is thinner and wider and can be carried with more facility to escape the eyes of scrutinizing guards.

Aebusa was taken to the office of United States Marshal Hendry and his case set for hearing before the United States commissioner on September 22. During the remainder of the stay of the Chiyo every person connected with the ship was carefully examined before being allowed on the gallery. Deck hands who have heretofore had the run of the gallery were examined every time they crossed the gangway. A woman in the federal service watched all women passengers closely as they prepared to leave the ship. Every precaution is now being taken by the inspectors under the direction of Chief Inspector R. J. Taylor to prevent opium from being brought ashore even in the smallest quantities.
